We all know camping is fun and it allows us to connect with our friends, families and nature. But that's just the start. From positive impacts on physical and mental health, here are three reasons why camping is good for your health.

First of all, camping helps with problem solving. Sometimes camping and its associated activities present you with challenges that even Google cannot solve! You have to set up a tent or deal with various things you usually don't do in your daily life. In addition, camping often introduces you to new experiences. Tackling new challenges and experiences can keep our brains healthy, as they force us to think for ourselves. Camping is likely to introduce you to new activities and experiences.

Second of all, camping can help you sleep better. Research from the University of Colorado Boulder found that camping can reset our biological clocks and help those of us who find it tough to get to sleep and wake up in the morning. Camping can help us to adjust to the natural light-dark cycle if we're given that chance.

Last of all, camping makes you happier. While camping, serotonin, a natural hormone our brain produces, makes us feel happy. That's why camping is fun.

For these reasons, camping is good for our health.

Q:

1. With camping, we can connect with families, friends and societies.
2. Camping offers us new activities that Google cannot solve.
3. While camping, we can have a good sleep.
4. A natural hormone makes us feel happy during camping.
5. Camping leads us to happy and healthy lives.
